Pronouns are words that are use in place of nouns, to avoid repetition of words and/or clumsiness.

Personal Pronoun
Personal pronouns are used for people and things.

Subjective
He eats lunch - She eats lunch
They eat lunch - We eat lunch
You eat lunch - I eat lunch
It has a trunk and tusks
It opened its mouth and roared

The book belongs to Mark. It is his book.
Tanya owns the red car. The car is hers.
We live in that house on the hill. It’s ours.
These flowers came from our neighbour’s garden. These are their flowers.
That game belongs to me. It’s my game.
That’s your wallet. It belongs to you.
That belongs to my friend’s family. It’s theirs.

Possessive Pronouns
Possessive pronouns show who or what owns them. They stand in the place of a noun that is owned by someone.

Possessive pronouns show who or what owns them. They stand in the place of a noun that is owned by someone.

The book belongs to Mark. It is his book.
Tanya owns the red car. The car is hers.
We live in that house on the hill. It’s ours.
These flowers came from our neighbour’s garden. These are their flowers.
That game belongs to me. It’s my game.
That’s your wallet. It belongs to you.
That belongs to my friend’s family. It’s theirs.

Interrogative Pronouns
Interrogative pronouns ask questions such as who, what, where, whose?

Who are you?
Which way do we go?
What are you doing?
Whose shoes are these?

This page is only an introduction to pronouns. Please consult a grammar book for other type of pronouns, such as relative, demonstrative, reflexive and indefinite pronouns.

Created by David Newman speech-language pathologist